

Wife of Twitter CEO 'tweets' delivery

August 11 2009

The pregnant wife of Twitter chief executive Evan Williams delivered updates on the delivery of their son on Tuesday using the microblogging service co-founded by her husband.

"Dear Twitter, My water broke. It wasn't like Charlotte in Sex and the City. Now, timing contractions on an iPhone app," Sara Morishige Williams wrote late Monday on her Twitter feed @sara.

"The Contraction Tracker was fun until the contractions got painful," she informed her more than 14,000 followers about an hour later.

"Admitted to hospital. Got the second-to-last room," she "tweeted" early Tuesday, followed several hours later by: "Epidural, yes please."

In one final "tweet" following her request for painkillers, she wrote:

"The heartbeat monitor soothes the silence of a room that will shortly be anything but silent."

Her husband then took over on his Twitter feed @ev. "Operation Baby Launch continues on track, though a bit too slowly in my opinion. That's usually the case with big launches though," he said.

That was followed several hours later by another message announcing the delivery.

"Yes! @sara gave birth to a perfect baby boy. Both are well. 8 pounds, 21 inches! Smiles all around," it said.

The couple live in San Francisco. It is their first child.

(c) 2009 AFP

Citation: Wife of Twitter CEO 'tweets' delivery (2009, August 11) retrieved 24 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2009-08-wife-twitter-ceo-tweets-delivery.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.