The Twitter list, available at @verified/olympians, includes US ski star Lindsey Vonn, who "tweets" as @lindseyvonn and whose account has attracted more than 38,000 followers.

Vonn is also keeping fans up to date on her Vancouver preparations on her Facebook page.

US short-track speed skater Apolo Anton Ohno is another US athlete firing off messages on Twitter -- as @ApoloOhno -- and he used the service on Thursday to send his best wishes to Vonn, who has been battling an injury.

Ohno's teammate, Chad Hedrick, is also "tweeting," as @chadhedrick. In addition to Twitter, Hedrick is posting photos to the "Chad Hedrick Fan Page" on Facebook and has an "inspirational video" on YouTube.

US snowboarder Louie Vito used Twitter to declare the rooms at the Olympic village "cool" although he said they "forgot TVs."

Angela Ruggiero of the US women's hockey team told nearly 35,000 followers of her Twitter account -- @angelaruggiero -- the Olympic village was "awesome."

The International Olympic Committee has also embraced social networking and its official Facebook page about the Winter Games attracted its one millionth fan this week.
