

Google in talks to buy Hulu: report

July 1 2011

A view of the headquarters of the internet search engine company Google in Mountain View, California. Google is in preliminary talks to acquire the online video site Hulu, the Los Angeles Times reported on its website, citing anonymous sources familiar with the discussions.

Google is in preliminary talks to acquire the online video site Hulu, the Los Angeles Times reported on its website Friday, citing anonymous sources familiar with the discussions.

Hulu's owners have met with Google and other prospective buyers including Yahoo! and Microsoft, the newspaper reported.

The site, which broadcasts television shows through on-demand streaming, is owned by a trio of traditional media giants -- Disney, NBC Universal and News Corp. -- and private equity firm Providence Equity Partners.

Google is already a major presence in the online video market through its control of YouTube, and a tie-up with Hulu would further consolidate the web search giant's strength in Internet broadcasting.

Last month, The Wall Street Journal reported that Hulu had been approached by a potential buyer after having renounced its desire to go public.

Founded in 2008, Hulu is only available in the United States. It lets users watch a selection of television shows for free with advertisements, though subscribers can also pay a fee to watch the shows on connected televisions or gaming consoles.

(c) 2011 AFP

Citation: Google in talks to buy Hulu: report (2011, July 1) retrieved 19 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2011-07-google-hulu.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.