

Officials: Obama likely to OK phone record changes

January 15 2014, by Julie Pace

President Barack Obama is expected to endorse changes to the way the government collects millions of Americans' phone records for possible future surveillance, but he is leaving many of the specific adjustments for Congress to sort out.

That's according to three U.S. officials familiar with the White House intelligence review.

Such a move by Obama would thrust much of the decision-making toward a branch of government that is deeply divided over the future of the surveillance apparatus. And members of Congress are in no hurry to settle their differences and quickly enact broad changes.

Obama is reviewing more than 40 recommendations from a presidential commission.

The officials insisted on anonymity because they have not been authorized to discuss the White House review by name.

© 2014 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Officials: Obama likely to OK phone record changes (2014, January 15) retrieved 24 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2014-01-obama.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.