

Spain town hires poo 'detective' to spy on dog owners

April 2 2014

Fed up of dog dirt underfoot on its streets, a Spanish town has hired a detective to catch owners who fail to pick up after their pets, officials said Wednesday.

The mayor's office in Colmenar Viejo, a historical town north of Madrid, said fines and warning signs had failed to coax some owners into picking up their dogs' mess.

So from next week dog-walkers will be spied on by a professional "Canine Detective" who will prowl the town to catch negligent dog owners red-handed.

"This person, incognito, will watch the streets and public spaces in which most dog dirt has to be cleaned up," the town hall said in a statement.

"Their job will be to film owners who do not pick up after their dogs in flagrante and hand in this evidence along with a report as proof in police proceedings."

The town hall said offenders would face possible fines of up to 150 euros ($200), with higher penalties for repeat offenders.

Before the detective starts work, authorities have sent actors into the streets dressed up as detectives to warn locals of the anti-excrement campaign, which it said was motivated by health concerns.

"Most dog owners are responsible people who do not let their pets defecate in inappropriate places and pick up the excrement immediately," said Colmenar Viejo's conservative Mayor Miguel Angel Santamaria.

"But unfortunately there is a minority that lacks consideration for others and leaves a trace of its incivility in streets, pavements and even the entries to schools or children's playgrounds."

© 2014 AFP

Citation: Spain town hires poo 'detective' to spy on dog owners (2014, April 2) retrieved 13 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2014-04-spain-town-hires-poo-spy.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.