

Japan zoo makes wild fashion statement with lion-ripped jeans

July 14 2014

Lions play with a denim covered tyre at the Kamine Zoo in Hitachi city in Ibaraki prefecture, eastern Japan

A Japanese zoo has taken the catwalk to a wild new level, using some of its fiercest inhabitants to rip and claw jeans to a fashionably distressed look.

The facility northeast of Tokyo has unveiled "Zoo Jeans", styled by the fangs and claws of lions, tigers and bears.

Zoo officials said the material held up well, all things considered.

"We wrapped several pieces of denim around tyres and other toys. Once they were thrown into the enclosures, the animals jumped on them," said zoo director Nobutaka Namae, adding that the pieces were later patched together to create the finished product.

"The denim was actually much tougher than we had thought, and it turned out nicely destroyed."

The idea came from a Tokyo advertising executive who wanted to give something back to the zoo where he spent time as a child, Namae added.

Two pairs of jeans ripped by lions and a tiger-destroyed version are being auctioned on the Internet with proceeds to be donated to the zoo and the conservation group WWF.

As of Monday, bidding on the tiger-torn denim had soared to 121,000 yen ($1,200).

A tiger plays with a denim covered tyre at the Kamine Zoo in Hitachi city in Ibaraki prefecture, eastern Japan

They will be on exhibit at the Kamine Zoo—along with a bear-savaged version—until next week.

© 2014 AFP

Citation: Japan zoo makes wild fashion statement with lion-ripped jeans (2014, July 14) retrieved 12 May 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2014-07-japan-zoo-wild-fashion-statement.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.