

Xbox outages, IRS lawsuits, and other year-end drama

December 31 2014, by Matt Day, The Seattle Times

One holiday-shortened week gone, another arrived. Here's a rundown of the Microsoft-flavored news you missed if you had the good fortune to unplug last week:

-The IRS has sued Steve Ballmer and a slate of other current and former Microsoft executives in an effort to get them to testify in a long running tax probe. The agency is looking into how Microsoft treated subsidiaries for tax purposes. Microsoft said it had expected to receive a notice of an increased back tax bill this month. Company lawyers also suggested the subpoenas to executives are part of a campaign to force the company to the negotiating table regarding the taxes it paid between 2004 and 2006.

-Microsoft, along with rival Google, agreed to host streaming video of Sony's "The Interview," after threats of terrorist attacks spurred some theater chains to pull the film. The online gross for the film's first four days? $15 million, according to the studio.

-Some gamers hoping to try out new goodies on Christmas were disappointed, as the online arms of both Microsoft's Xbox and Sony's PlayStation went down. A hacking group took credit for the disruptions. Sony said its outage was indeed the result of a distributed denial of service attack, which essentially floods servers with requests in an effort to bring them down. Microsoft was mum on the cause of Xbox's failure.

-Finally, before the Seahawks battered the St. Louis Rams to clinch the No. 1 seed in the NFL playoffs, I looked at Microsoft's strategy to boost its relevance to consumers through the lens of its most popular pitchman: Russell Wilson.

©2014 The Seattle Times

Distributed by Tribune Content Agency, LLC

Citation: Xbox outages, IRS lawsuits, and other year-end drama (2014, December 31) retrieved 20 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2014-12-xbox-outages-irs-lawsuits-year-end.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.