

Bitter cold temperatures following the latest winter storm

February 18 2015, by Jonathan Drew And Meredith Somers

Charlie Perkins gets a ride on a snow disc from his father, David, as they speed down a snow-covered street, Tuesday, Feb 17, 2015, in Roanoke, Va. A winter storm blasted parts of the Mid-Atlantic and the South on Tuesday, creating treacherous road conditions and leaving hundreds of thousands without power. (AP Photo/The Roanoke Times, Don Petersen)

For the South, the storm that dumped a foot of snow in some places was only the beginning. Temperatures in the teens will grip the region over the next few days, freezing and refreezing the snow and ice, making the roads as hazardous as they were during the height of the storm.

The refreeze has already played out over and over in New England, where mountains of snow are piled high. Here's a look at how people are handling the winter weather:

DON'T JUMP

Boston residents overwhelmed by massive snowfalls the last month have been recording videos of themselves jumping out of windows and into snowbanks, and Mayor Marty Walsh wants them to cut it out.

Walsh chastised thrill-seekers who've been filming themselves performing the frosty feat and then posting the videos on social media websites.

Walsh says, "It's a foolish thing to do, and you could kill yourself."

He says Boston "isn't Loon Mountain," a New Hampshire ski resort. He said Monday the stunts are dangerous as city workers struggle to clear snow-clogged streets and deal with snowbanks 10 feet high.

COMMUTING NIGHTMARE

There appears to be no end in sight to the commuting woes in greater Boston, which has seen unprecedented snowfalls totaling nearly 8 feet this winter.

Transit officials warn the system won't run normally for at least a month—and much longer if the region is hit with more significant snowfall. Areas of southern New England could see light snows Wednesday and Thursday; forecasters are also eying another storm this weekend.

Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker said Tuesday he's working more closely with the MTBA, an independent transit agency. He's also requested meetings with Keolis, the private company that provides commuter rail service for the MBTA, amid complaints of widespread delays in that system.

The MBTA has been severely hampered by persistent snow and ice, leading to long delays and outright cancellations for commuter, subway and even Amtrak trains for much of the past three weeks. Highways are also jammed with more cars than usual in the notoriously traffic-clogged region as riders try and avoid the transit problems.

DOGGONE IT

Here's an upside to all this snow: It was so deep in Troy, New Hampshire, that residents were finally able to capture a black Labrador retriever that had been on the lam for three years.

The wily female pup, who's 3 or 4 years old, had been spotted regularly, but nobody could get close enough for a grab. That changed on Sunday night when Courtney Davis and his girlfriend, Tiffany Bennett, spotted her running from an abandoned trailer. Hampered by deep, fluffy snow after a series of heavy storms, the dog couldn't get away again.

Carl Patten Jr., who's been keeping the pooch in his heated garage since then, said Tuesday that he's using two collars on her: one a harness and the other around her neck, just to be safe.

"It's like Houdini, this dog," Patten said.

ROOF RAGE

Massachusetts officials are stepping up warnings about the potential for roofs to collapse under the weight of snow that has built up in recent weeks.

Public Safety Commissioner Thomas Gatzunis said Tuesday that owners of residential and commercial buildings should be aware of signs of stress on roofs, including ceilings that are sagging or developing cracks.

Other signs could include popping or cracking sounds from the roof or attic area, and doors or windows that either won't open or suddenly open on their own.

Jamie Treiver, left, Carrie Warner and Camdyn Lockley enjoy a sled ride at Jim Barnett Park, Tuesday, Feb. 17, 2015 in Winchester, Va. A winter storm blasted parts of the Mid-Atlantic and the South on Tuesday, creating treacherous road conditions and leaving hundreds of thousands without power. (AP Photo/The Winchester Star, Jeff Taylor)

Numerous partial roof collapses have been reported in the state but no serious injuries to date.

While most of the snow has fallen so far has been powdery, Gatzunis says any rain or wet snow in the future could dramatically add to the weight on roofs.

PIPING COLD

The Baltimore City Department of Public Works says crews are struggling to keep up with water outages caused by frozen pipes as bitter cold continues to grip central Maryland.

Maintenance crews from the Bureau of Water and Wastewater are working 12-hour shifts to deal with outages caused by leaks and breaks in water mains. The department has also hired private contractors to help with the workload.

The department has gotten more than 1,000 calls since Sunday reporting outages.

COLD CARNIVAL

If there was a theme for this year's Mardi Gras costumes in New Orleans, it was 'Brrrrr.'

Despite the chilly temperatures, the crowds were thick Tuesday. Tutus were worn over jeans and many costumes, such as clowns or animals, were baggy enough to cover sweat shirts.

Erin Buran, of New Orleans, wore a white jacket and feathery angel wings.

"My angel wings have tequila in them," she said, showing the mouthpiece of a hydration backpack covered by the wings.

ICE BABY

Some things just won't wait, as Jerry Nuesell can attest.

With his wife 33 weeks pregnant, the couple was headed to the doctor's office when Lisa's contractions led them to UNC Hospitals for the arrival of their first born, a boy.

"Turned out the little fellow was ready to make an appearance much sooner than we planned," Nuesell said Tuesday.

Men walk past one another on a snowy sidewalk, Tuesday, Feb. 17, 2015, in Baltimore. Tens of thousands of people in the Mid-Atlantic region stayed home as government offices shut down following a winter storm, leaving the roads and sidewalks in the nation's capital and its suburbs looking desolate. (AP Photo/Patrick Semansky)

NO TOURISTS—PLEASE

The tourism office of Ithaca, New York, is waving the white flag, advising visitors on its website to check out the Florida Keys instead.

VisitIthaca.com's home page displays sunny photos from Florida and provides links to Florida Keys information.

The top of the page reads: "That's it. We surrender. Winter, you win. Key West anyone?"

Ithaca and the rest of upstate New York have been in the grips of a snowy and brutally cold winter.

SNOWBALL FIGHT

Even though the snow in D.C. wasn't ideal for a fight, people showed up anyway, some in costumes and battle gear. One wore a ski helmet and goggles, another had on a giraffe costume, and one wore a Captain America shirt and carried a shield.

"It's not really snowball material. You can kind of get one, but it's a lot of squeezing," said Reco Thomas, of Alexandria, Virginia, as she tried to compact fluffy snow.

Rob Grell, a George Washington University medical student dressed as Batman, carried fellow student Shaunak Mulani on his shoulders as people pelted the two of them.

A man rides a bike past ice-coated trees and plants on University Avenue, Tuesday, Feb. 17, 2015, in Oxford, Miss. A snow and ice storm blasted parts of the Mid-Atlantic and the South on Tuesday, creating treacherous road conditions and leaving hundreds of thousands without power. (AP Photo/The Oxford Eagle, Bruce Newman)

"This is overall just a fine time," Mulani said as he shook off snow.

—

EXECUTIVE ORDERS

The winter storm that buried Kentucky in snow has prompted Gov. Steve Beshear to issue two executive orders aimed at protecting consumers from price gouging and making sure families have access to needed prescription medicines.

Beshear said Tuesday the orders are meant to ensure Kentuckians pay fair prices for products like gasoline and won't have to worry about skipping doses of medicine.

Traffic moves slowly along an icy Interstate 485 at Rea Road, early Tuesday, Feb. 17, 2015, in Charlotte N.C. About a half-inch of ice accumulated overnight topped by a dusting of snow. (AP Photo/The Charlotte Observer, Davie Hinshaw)

—

MORE COLD, NO HEAT

Jesse Stewart from Pike Electric prepares to work on high voltage lines on Browns Bridge Road in Gainesville, Ga., Tuesday, Feb. 17, 2015. About 200,000 Georgia households and businesses awoke this morning without power. Ice that blanketed north Georgia, including the top end of metro Atlanta, snapped trees and powerlines. (AP Photo/Atlanta Journal-Constitution, Bob Andres)

While most of the snow, sleet and freezing rain have stopped falling in North Carolina, temperatures will continue to plummet, creating a new challenge for thousands of residents who have lost power.

Gov. Pat McCrory urged more counties to consider setting up shelters for displaced residents and the homeless—but he discouraged residents from using unsafe sources of heating within their homes, such as charcoal.

Ian Shaw cross-country skis along the Roanoke Valley Greenway, Tuesday, Feb 17, 2015, in Roanoke, Va. A winter storm blasted parts of the Mid-Atlantic and the South on Tuesday, creating treacherous road conditions and leaving hundreds of thousands without power. (AP Photo/The Roanoke Times, Don Petersen)

© 2015 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Bitter cold temperatures following the latest winter storm (2015, February 18) retrieved 27 June 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2015-02-bitter-cold-temperatures-latest-winter.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.