

Emaciated sea lion rescued on San Francisco boulevard

February 12 2015

An emaciated young sea lion that was probably looking for food was rescued along a major boulevard in San Francisco, more than 1,000 feet from the ocean is seen in a cage at the the Marine Mammal Center in Sausalito, California on Wednesday, Feb 11, 2015. Hundreds of sick and starving sea lion pups and yearlings are turning up on California beaches. What's separating the animals, who should be nursing, from their mothers remains unclear. (AP Photo/National Park Service)

Official say that an emaciated sea lion yearling that was probably looking for food was rescued along a major San Francisco boulevard, more than 1,000 feet from the ocean.

The San Francisco Chronicle report the young male pinniped had dragged himself uphill, through shrubbery and over the busy road before being discovered Wednesday by two motorists.

A park ranger driving through the area stopped to help and took the animal to the Marine Mammal Center in Sausalito, where the ranger named him "Persevero," which means to persevere in Latin.

Officials say the sea lion weighs 28 pounds instead of a normal 80 pounds.

Hundreds of sick and starving sea lion pups and yearlings are turning up on California beaches. But wildlife officials say it remains unclear what's separating the animals, who should be nursing, from their mothers.

© 2015 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Emaciated sea lion rescued on San Francisco boulevard (2015, February 12) retrieved 25 April 2024 from https://phys.org/news/2015-02-emaciated-sea-lion-san-francisco.html

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.