

Google unveils unified email for Android users

March 30 2015

Google said on March 30, 2015 that it is updating its mobile Gmail app for Android device users to allow them to manage multiple email accounts from a single program

Google said Monday it was updating its mobile Gmail app for Android device users to allow them to manage multiple email accounts from a single program.

"Starting today, you'll be able to view all your mail at once, regardless of which account it's from, using the new 'All Inboxes' option," Google software engineer Regis Decamps said in a blog post.

"This way, you can read and respond to all your messages without having to hop between accounts."

The new app will aggregate email from rival services such as Yahoo and Microsoft Outlook, among others.

Gmail had allowed users to access multiple accounts from desktop computers, but the new app aims to seamlessly integrate the various email services in a unified inbox with search and preview capability.

© 2015 AFP

Citation: Google unveils unified email for Android users (2015, March 30) retrieved 26 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2015-03-google-unveils-email-android-users.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.