

Twitter looks to broaden access with new home page

April 17 2015, by Andrew Khouri, Los Angeles Times

Twitter is getting a makeover amid concerns that its user growth is slowing.

The social media platform updated its home page Wednesday, offering visitors the option to click on several popular topics without signing into an account.

Previously, home page visitors were asked to log in to gain access to lists of scrolling tweets.

Now, visitors to Twitter.com can click on a popular topic - whether it's NASCAR drivers and teams, cute animals or pop artists. They will then see a running list of tweets on the topic.

The San Francisco company recently reported strong revenue growth in the fourth quarter, but gains in active monthly users missed even the sober predictions of Wall Street analysts.

In a blog post Wednesday announcing the updated home page, Twitter said it was "making a big change for the many millions of people who visit every month who don't log in, but still want to know what's happening."

Twitter said it's introducing the new feature on U.S. desktops first and plans to roll it out elsewhere in the future.

©2015 Los Angeles Times

Distributed by Tribune Content Agency, LLC

Citation: Twitter looks to broaden access with new home page (2015, April 17) retrieved 26 March 2023 from <https://phys.org/news/2015-04-twitter-broaden-access-home-page.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.