

Microsoft to buy German start-up behind Wunderlist app: report

June 2 2015

Microsoft's latest acquisition created in 2010, Wunderlist allows users to create lists to manage tasks on many devices, mobile as well as desktop

Microsoft has agreed to acquire 6Wunderkinder GmbH, a Berlin-based startup behind the Wunderlist to-do list app, for between $100-200 million (91-182 million euros), the Wall Street Journal reported on Tuesday.

Quoting a person familiar with the deal, the daily said the purchase was part of Microsoft's drive to enhance its line of mobile apps.

In March, Microsoft acquired the Californian start-up LiveLoop and its app which allows multiple users to collaborate on PowerPoint presentations simultaneously.

6Wunderkinder was not immediately available to comment on Tuesday.

Created in 2010, Wunderlist allows users to create lists to manage tasks on many devices, mobile as well as desktop.
