

Vevo cuts deal with Warner Music to license videos

August 2 2016

In another move to break from YouTube, music video brand Vevo has cut a deal to license videos from Warner Music, repairing a rift between major labels that began with the launch of the service seven years ago.

Erik Huggers, who took over as CEO of Vevo in April, on Tuesday called the deal an important milestone as it forges a "new relationship" with Warner. Vevo is co-owned by major labels Sony and Universal. Warner has its own channel on YouTube.

Warner CEO Steve Cooper called the deal the latest way it was attempting to "unlock the true value of music videos."

Vevo relaunched its mobile app last month in a refresh that Huggers said paved the way for more original content and an ad-free subscription plan.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Vevo cuts deal with Warner Music to license videos (2016, August 2) retrieved 3 May 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2016-08-vevo-warner-music-videos.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--