

Sprint to connect 1M students under 'My Brother's Keeper'

October 11 2016, by Darlene Superville

The White House says 1 million low-income high school students will receive free internet access under President Barack Obama's "My Brother's Keeper" initiative for minority males.

The Sprint Corp. will provide students who can't get on the internet at home with free tablets, smartphones and other mobile devices, and four years of service.

Sprint CEO Marcelo Claure says the goal is to complete distribution within five years.

Obama launched "My Brother's Keeper" in 2014. The program is among the topics the president will discuss Tuesday in Greensboro, North Carolina, during a forum hosted by "The Undefeated." The ESPN website explores the intersection of race, sports and culture. ESPN is broadcasting the forum Tuesday night.

Obama plans to campaign in Greensboro for Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton and North Carolina Democrats.

© 2016 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: Sprint to connect 1M students under 'My Brother's Keeper' (2016, October 11) retrieved 24 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2016-10-sprint-1m-students-brother-keeper.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.