

In Sweden, wreck could be sistership to iconic vessel

November 8 2019

---

A marine archaeologist says one of two shipwrecks found in Stockholm's archipelago could be the sister ship of a famed 17th-century Swedish warship that sank on its maiden voyage.

Jim Hansson says divers found the vessels on Tuesday off Vaxholm island, an area where several ships—including the Applet, sister ship of the Vasa—are known to be at the bottom of the sea.

Hansson said Friday it was "incredibly cool" to swim inside a ship resembling the Vasa, which was largely intact when raised in 1961 and now has its own museum.

The Vasa sank in 1628, minutes after leaving port as the pride of the Swedish navy. It keeled over, lacking the ballast to counterweight its heavy guns.

© 2019 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Citation: In Sweden, wreck could be sistership to iconic vessel (2019, November 8) retrieved 25 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2019-11-sweden-sistership-iconic-vessel.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.
--