

Humpback whale found dead on beach in France

May 26 2021

A dead humpback whale is evacuated after washing up on Carnon beach near La Grande-Motte, southern France.

A humpback whale was found dead on Wednesday on a beach along the Mediterranean in southern France, in what experts said was a rare incident.

"As soon as we arrived, it was already dead," said Elodie Sene, a caretaker at an aquarium in the town of Grau-du-Roi.

"I've never seen anything like this, it's the first time I see this in the Mediterranean," she added.

The seven-meter-long (23-foot) animal was evacuated from the beach at Carnon, near the seaside town of La Grande-Motte, and was to undergo an autopsy to determine the cause of death.

Humpback whales are not usually found in the Mediterranean Sea where fin whales are more common.

For several weeks now, attention has focused on a starving grey whale lost in the Mediterranean, far from its natural habitat in the Pacific ocean.

The whale, some eight metres long (26 feet) and around 15 months old, had already been seen off Morocco in March, and then again in Italian waters, first near Naples, then Rome and then Genoa.

It was last seen several days ago off the coast of Majorca, Spain.

Humpback whales are not usually found in the Mediterranean Sea where fin whales are more common.

The what was evacuated from the beach and was to undergo an autopsy.

© 2021 AFP

Citation: Humpback whale found dead on beach in France (2021, May 26) retrieved 18 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2021-05-humpback-whale-dead-beach-france.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.