

RIM shares up as CEO says tablet to cost below 500 dollars

10 November 2010

The BlackBerry PlayBook is pictured in September 2010. Shares in Research In Motion surged on Wall Street on Wednesday after the chief executive of the company behind the BlackBerry said its upcoming tablet computer would cost below 500 dollars.

Shares in Research In Motion surged on Wall Street on Wednesday after the chief executive of the company behind the BlackBerry said its upcoming tablet computer would cost below 500 dollars.

RIM shares were up 7.53 percent at 59.14 dollars in afternoon trading.

RIM co-chief executive Jim Balsillie said the Canadian firm's touchscreen tablet computer, the "PlayBook," will be introduced in North America in the first quarter of 2011 with a global launch in the second quarter of the year.

"There's a lot of demand and we are seeing a lot of interest from international retailers," Balsillie told The Wall Street Journal on the sidelines of the Group of 20 summit in Seoul.

RIM unveiled the Playbook in San Francisco in September as it seeks to compete with Apple's popular iPad and Samsung's recently launched Galaxy Tab.

The PlayBook has a seven-inch (17.8-centimeter) display, smaller than the 9.7 inches of Apple's iPad, and plays Adobe Flash video software, which is banned from the Apple device.

The cheapest iPad costs 499 dollars while the top model is priced at 829 dollars.

(c) 2010 AFP

APA citation: RIM shares up as CEO says tablet to cost below 500 dollars (2010, November 10)
retrieved 25 September 2021 from <https://phys.org/news/2010-11-rim-ceo-tablet-dollars.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.