

Google's free Wi-Fi extends to the sky, on planes

November 11 2010, By Brier Dudley

Google is making its free Wi-Fi for travelers a holiday tradition. It started last year when the company announced free Wi-Fi at airports around the country.

This year, the company's taking it further and offering free in-flight Wi-Fi during the holidays on a few participating airlines.

The company said that it's picking up the tab for in-flight Wi-Fi on AirTran, Delta and Virgin America domestic flights from Nov. 20 through Jan. 2. The Wi-Fi is otherwise a pay service provided by Gogo.

Google's Chrome browser business group is sponsoring the freebie, so users shouldn't be surprised if there's some sort of suggestion that they download and try the browser.

(c) 2010, The Seattle Times.

Distributed by McClatchy-Tribune Information Services.

Citation: Google's free Wi-Fi extends to the sky, on planes (2010, November 11) retrieved 19 May 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2010-11-google-free-wi-fi-sky-planes.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.