

Thousands in Germany protest NSA surveillance

28 July 2013

U.S. President Barack Obama visited Berlin last month. But German opposition parties remain skeptical of the government's claim that it had known nothing about the surveillance.

© 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

Hundreds of demonstrators protest against supposed surveillance by the US National Security Agency NSA, during a rally in Frankfurt, Germany, Saturday July 27, 2013. (AP Photo/dpa, Roland Holschneider)

(AP)—Thousands of people are taking to the streets in Germany to protest against the alleged widespread surveillance of Internet users by U.S. intelligence services.

Protesters, responding to calls by a loose network calling itself #stopwatchingus, braved searing summer temperatures Saturday to demonstrate in Hamburg, Munich, Berlin and up to 35 other German cities and towns.

Some wore tinfoil hats to shield themselves from the sun—and make a political statement about warding off unwanted eavesdroppers.

Others held placards showing support for National Security Agency leaker Edward Snowden.

Chancellor Angela Merkel raised the issue of the NSA's alleged interception of Web traffic when

APA citation: Thousands in Germany protest NSA surveillance (2013, July 28) retrieved 26 February 2021 from <https://phys.org/news/2013-07-thousands-germany-protest-nsa-surveillance.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.