

Founder of Dolby Laboratories dies

12 September 2013

Ray Dolby, audio pioneer, American inventor and founder of Dolby Laboratories, has died at the age of 80.

The company said Thursday that Dolby died in his home at San Francisco. He had been living with Alzheimer's disease for several years and was diagnosed with acute leukemia this summer.

Dolby founded his namesake company in 1965 and grew it into an industry leader of audio technology. His work in noise reduction and surround sound led to the creation of a number of technologies that are still used in music, movies and entertainment today. He holds more than 50 U.S. patents.

Dolby won a number of notable awards and honors for his life's work including several Emmys, a Grammy and the National Medal of Technology from President Clinton.

© 2013 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Founder of Dolby Laboratories dies (2013, September 12) retrieved 17 November 2019 from <https://phys.org/news/2013-09-founder-dolby-laboratories-dies.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.