

Hackers urge Sony to pull N. Korea comedy film: reports

December 9 2014

The group calling itself GOP—or Guardians of Peace—demanded that Sony pull a soon-to-be-released comedy depicting a fictional CIA plot to kill North Korea's leader

A group which claims to have hacked Sony's servers demanded Monday that its movie studio pull a soon-to-be-released comedy depicting a fictional CIA plot to kill North Korea's leader, reports said.

North Korea Sunday denied involvement in the brazen cyber attack on Sony Pictures, but praised it as a "righteous deed" potentially orchestrated by supporters furious over the movie "The Interview," due out on Christmas Day.

In a new message Monday cited by entertainment journal Variety and the Wall Street Journal, the group calling itself GOP—or Guardians of Peace—said: "We have already given our clear demand to the management team of Sony.

"However, they have refused to accept."

In clearly non-native English, it continued: "It seems that you think everything will be well, if you find out the attacker, while no reacting to our demand. We are sending you our warning again.

"Do carry out our demand if you want to escape us. And, Stop immediately showing the movie of terrorism which can break the regional peace and cause the War!," it said, without referring explicitly to "The Interview."

The movie, starring Seth Rogen and James Franco as two journalists recruited by the CIA to assassinate Kim Jong-Un, has infuriated Pyongyang, which earlier warned of "merciless retaliation" against what it called a "wanton act of terror."

It is due for release in the United States on December 25.

In a statement, Sony said: "As part of our commitment to helping private industry protect against the threat posed by malicious cyber criminals, the FBI routinely provides briefings on cyber security awareness. Strong public-private partnerships are key to guarding against threats in cyberspace."

And a source familiar with the case said the authenticity of the latest message was unclear, adding "Many people (are) coming out of the woodwork."

Meanwhile another Sony division, the Playstation Network, was also the target of an attack which took it offline for two hours on Sunday, according to the website re/code, which has led coverage of the GOP hacking affair.

A group called Lizard Squad claimed responsibility via its Twitter account, re/code said, noting that the group has claimed to be behind two other hacks this month on Microsoft's Xbox Live network.

© 2014 AFP

Citation: Hackers urge Sony to pull N. Korea comedy film: reports (2014, December 9) retrieved 25 April 2024 from <https://phys.org/news/2014-12-hackers-urge-sony-korea-comedy.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.