

Nobel laureates receive prizes in Stockholm

10 December 2015

Sweden's Princess Sophia (L) and Nobel physics co-laureate Takaaki Kajita of Japan arrive for the 2015 Nobel Banquet at Stockholm City Hall on December 10, 2015, after the presentation of the Nobel medals by King Carl XVI Gustaf

Dressed to the nines in tails and long gowns, the 2015 Nobel laureates in medicine, literature, economics, physics and chemistry received their prizes at a glittering ceremony in Stockholm on Thursday.

Earlier in the day, the Nobel Peace Prize was presented to the Tunisian National Dialogue Quartet at a separate ceremony in Oslo.

In Stockholm, the 10 laureates received their Nobel diplomas and gold medals from the hands of Sweden's King Carl XVI Gustaf, in a ceremony interspersed with classical music and presentations by the prize-awarding institutions.

The ceremony took place in front of 1,600 specially-invited guests at Stockholm's Concert Hall, decked out for the occasion with 20,000 white, yellow and orange flowers donated, as every year, by the Italian city of San Remo, where Swedish scientist and prize creator Alfred Nobel died on December 10, 1896.

China's Tu Youyou, William Campbell of the US and Satoshi Omura of Japan received the medicine prize for unlocking revolutionary treatments for malaria and roundworm, helping to roll back two parasitic diseases that blight millions of lives.

Takaaki Kajita of Japan and Arthur McDonald of Canada were awarded the physics prize for determining that neutrinos have mass, a key piece of the puzzle in understanding the cosmos.

The chemistry prize was presented to Sweden's Tomas Lindahl, Paul Modrich of the US and Aziz Sancar, a Turkish-American, for work on how cells repair damaged DNA.

Belarussian writer and dissident Svetlana Alexievich was given the literature prize for her work chronicling the horrors of war and life under the repressive Soviet regime.

Guests attend the 2015 Nobel peace prize award banquet in Stockholm City Hall on December 10, 2015

Finally, poverty expert Angus Deaton, a US-British microeconomist, took home the economics prize for groundbreaking work using household surveys to show how consumers, particularly the poor, decide what to buy and how policymakers can help them.

Later Thursday, the laureates were to attend a gala banquet at Stockholm's City Hall attended by 1,300 people.

© 2015 AFP

APA citation: Nobel laureates receive prizes in Stockholm (2015, December 10) retrieved 4 March 2021 from <https://phys.org/news/2015-12-nobel-laureates-prizes-stockholm.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.