

Greek archaeologists uncover riches overlooked by robbers

September 20 2019

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

Archaeologists in northern Greece have explored more than 200 new graves in a vast ancient cemetery that was plundered in antiquity but still retained rich finds, including a gold mask and bronze helmets.

In a statement Friday, the Culture Ministry said the most impressive finds came from the graves of warriors who died in the 6th century B.C. and were members of a powerful military aristocracy.

Recovered artefacts included the valuable face mask, made specially for funerals, four bronze helmets, iron spearheads and fragmented iron swords, a large bronze urn with ornate handles, an iron model of a farm cart and bronze leg armor.

The cemetery at Ahlada, near the town of Florina, has so far yielded nearly 1,300 graves, including this year's discoveries, from various eras.

© 2019 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.

APA citation: Greek archaeologists uncover riches overlooked by robbers (2019, September 20) retrieved 9 December 2022 from <https://phys.org/news/2019-09-greek-archaeologists-uncover-riches-overlooked.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.